

Lightweight women's double sculls (LW2x)

Match-up: Sophie Hosking & Katherine Copeland (GBR) vs. Zoe McBride & Jackie Kiddle (NZL)

The lightweight category always provides some extremely tight races, and we would not expect this race to be any different. Sophie Hosking and Katherine Copeland came together to win Olympic gold in 2012, finishing in a time of 7:09.30. One of the iconic images from the London 2012 Games was Copeland's surprised face when winning the medal. The duo was a young combination, with Copeland winning the lightweight women's single sculls just a year earlier at the under-23 championships.

They will go up against present-day stars from New Zealand, Zoe McBride and Jackie Kiddle. This similarly young duo are the current World Champions after a spectacular race in Linz-Ottensheim, Austria. Back in 2017, McBride and Kiddle picked up a silver medal after coming off their 2015 under-23 win. McBride also holds the current World Best Time in the lightweight women's single.

What about this race between the best of the British and the best of New Zealand, who would cross the line first?
